Coastal Charm

Once at the heart of the Arabian spice and slave trades, this ancient island of 3,000 inhabitants, situated on the Indian Ocean, is part of a small, undisturbed, vehicle-free Archipelago. Lamu, marked by its 18th century Swahili architecture, its warren of unnamed streets, and miles of sublime, often vacant beaches, is the perfect post-safari destination for sipping fresh coconut water while drifting to the breeze in a locally crafted sailboat.

A Pop of Culture

The shúkà has traditionally been a garment worn by Morans, or young Maasai warriors, and was made from cowhide or sheepskin before the modern-day cotton. Most common in red and plaid, the shúkà can be worn folded, tucked, knotted, or wrapped in whatever style one desires.

SAFARI

connoisseur

No Kenya safari would be complete without encountering the vast topography of Masai Mara. More than the quintessential landscape of east Africa, this 583-square-mile reserve boasts lions draped along the limbs of acacias, elephants leading their young in front of cloudless backdrops, hippopotamuses bathing alongside crocodiles in the Talek River, and millions of wildebeests, zebras, topis, and gazelles migrating to and from the Serengeti.

Up... Up... and Away

Every morning during the dry season—about an hour before the sun's valiant orange rim surfaces above the Mara horizon—hot air balloons lift off one by one across the plain. The journey lasts two hours and concludes with a full outdoor buffet, topped off with champagne, as giraffes, impalas, hyenas, and countless other wildlife begin yet another dramatic day in the distance.

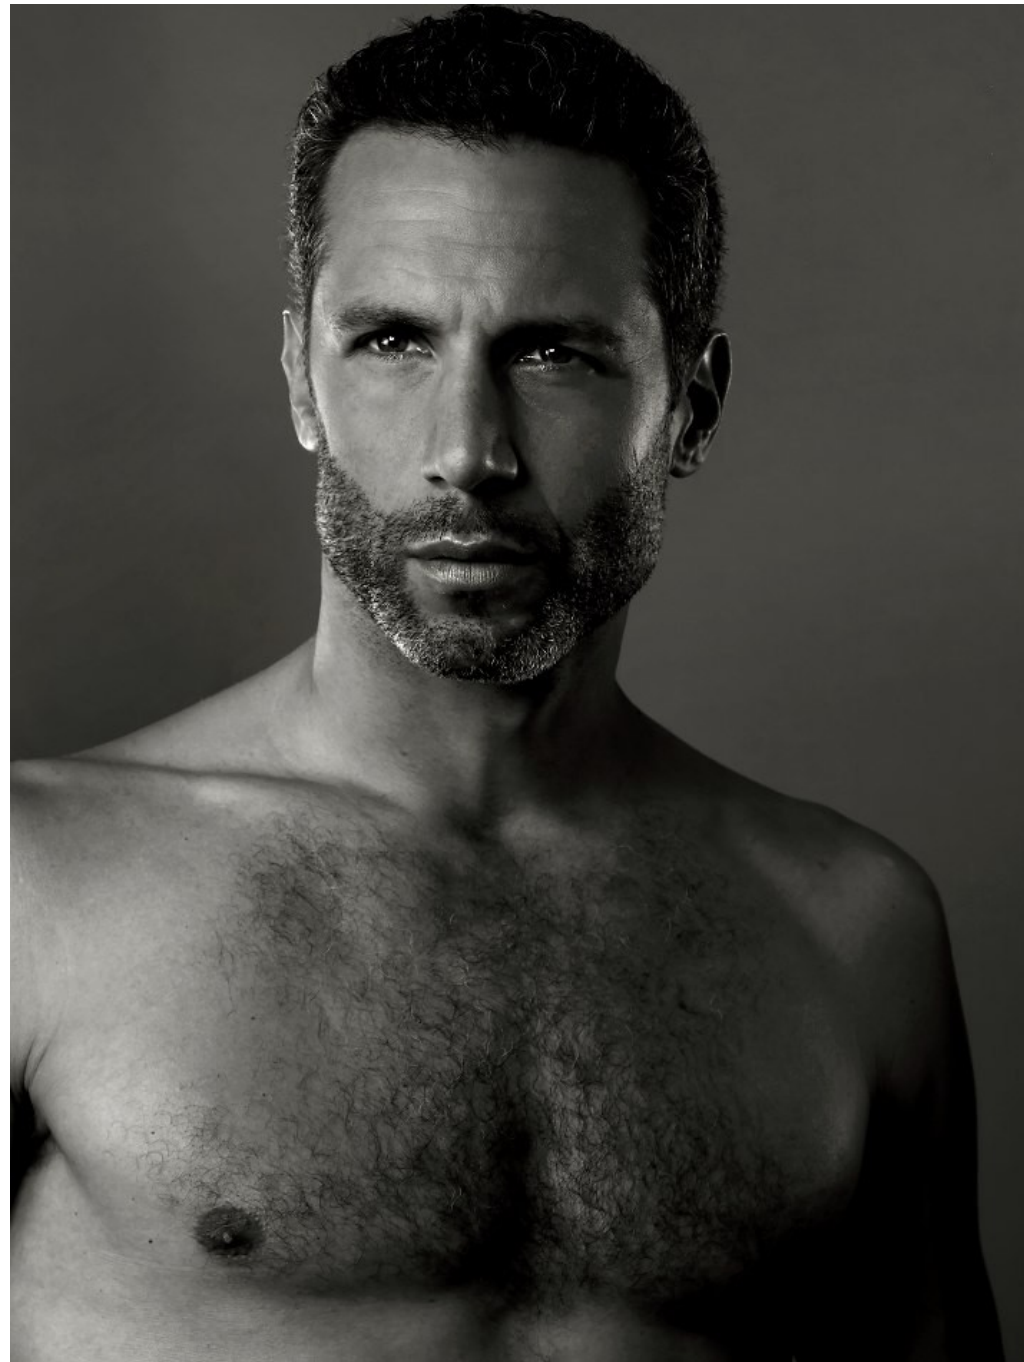

Relax and Replenish

Safaris, just like the animals they stalk, start early and end late. Taking some time to recharge between demanding excursions dominated by thrills, blistering heat, bumpy roads, and seemingly endless swells of dust helps to quiet not just the body but also the mind. The pool at Lake Nakuru Lodge is just the trick.

COLORBLOCK COWL
COURTNEY CEDARHOLM
This tri-colored cowl proves that a quick and simple knit can still turn heads. A wide rib pattern and chunky stripes of Woolstok from Blue Sky Fibers lend just enough detail to make this a standout piece. The long rectangle is sewn together at the cast-on and bound-off edges.

CABLED SWEATER
JOSH BENNETT
A classic crewneck can easily be old hat—unless you approach it from a different angle. A tubular cast-on at the lower edges is worked in k1, p1 rib in sturdy yet soft Eco Cloud from Cascade Yarns, but it's the all-over diagonal cable pattern that gives this piece its edge. The fully fashioned raglan armholes are a nice echo of the slanting cables, which stand out in neutral tones.
